

CONTENTS

Introduction	1
Chapter 1. Previous Studies of Stress Variation in Russian	5
Chapter 2. Towards a Typology of Stress Variation in Russian	17
2.1 Inflectional variation	17
2.2 Derivational variation	19
2.3 Free variation	20
2.4 Semantic variation	21
2.5 Dialectal variation	22
2.6 Professional stress	23
2.7 Summary	24
2.8 The pragmatic factor and frequency	25
Chapter 3. Inflectional Stress Variation and Frequency	30
3.1 Key areas of inflectional stress variation and their directional tendencies	30
3.1.1 Complex mobile feminine stress patterns of first-declension nouns	30
3.1.2 The nominative plural of masculine nouns in -а́/-я́	31
3.1.3 Movement of stress from nouns on to prepositions	32
3.1.4 Short adjectives with mobile stress	33
3.1.5 Second-conjugation verbs in -ить	35
3.1.6 Variant mobile stress in the past tense of verbs	36
3.2 Inflectional stress variation and frequency: a case study	38
Chapter 4. Derivational Stress Variation and Frequency	51
4.1 Stress variation and development towards uniform stress	51
4.2 Historical data	53
4.2.1 The nominal suffix -еж/-ёж	53
4.2.2 The nominal suffix -(ч)ёнок/-(ч)онок	54
4.2.3 The nominal suffix -анин/-янин/-чанин	56
4.2.4 The adjectival suffix -ивый	60
4.2.5 Adverbs with the prefix на- + adjectival root + -о	62
4.2.6 Summary	63
4.3 Complex areas of stress variation in derived words	66
4.3.1 The verbal suffix -ировать	66
4.3.2 A diachronic analysis of -ировать	66
4.3.3 A synchronic analysis of -ировать	82
4.3.4 Frequency and stress in the suffix -ировать	94
4.3.5 The combining form -лог	100
4.3.6 A diachronic analysis of -лог	101
4.3.7 A synchronic analysis of -лог	110
4.3.8 Frequency and stress in the combining form -лог	113
4.3.9 The adjectival suffix -чатый	114
4.3.10 A diachronic analysis of -чатый	116
4.3.11 A synchronic analysis of -чатый	121
4.3.12 Frequency and stress in the suffix -чатый	125
Chapter 5. Conclusion	128
References	131
Appendix: Words with Variant Stress and their Directional Tendencies:	137