

Contents

List of Figures	v
List of Tables	vii
List of Boxes	ix
Preface	xi
1 Introduction	1
1.1 The global water crisis – a crisis of governance?	1
1.2 Research questions and outline of the study	4
1.3 Current state of research and references	5
1.4 Methodology and framework of analysis	7
1.4.1 Definition of relevant variables	8
1.4.2 Advantages, disadvantages and selection of case studies	8
1.4.3 Data collection and analysis	11
2 IWRM in Theory	13
2.1 IWRM—the concept	13
2.1.1 Genesis of IWRM	13
2.1.2 Definition of Integrated Water Resources Management	17
2.1.3 Actors and interests	19
2.1.4 The content of IWRM	21
2.1.4.1 Main components: integration and management	21
2.1.4.2 Superior goals and objectives	23
2.1.4.3 Main principles	24
2.1.5 A critical look at the concept of IWRM	37
2.1.5.1 IWRM in opposition to Adaptive Management	37
2.1.5.2 IWRM as a theoretical model?	38
2.2 Getting the institutions right for IWRM?	40
2.2.1 Definition and function of institutions	41
2.2.2 Institutional framework and conditions required for IWRM	43
2.2.3 Institutional Decomposition and Analysis framework	49
2.2.4 Institutional change and ‘institutional bricolage’	50

2.3	Interdependency of IWRM and Good (Water) Governance	53
2.3.1	Governance concept	54
2.3.2	Normative implications of governance	57
2.3.3	IWRM as prerequisite for Good (Water) Governance or vice versa? . .	59
2.4	Preliminary conclusion and tentative hypothesis	61
3	IWRM in Praxis	65
3.1	Special challenges for IWRM in the Middle East	65
3.1.1	Climate change	66
3.1.2	Role of water in Islam	68
3.2	IWRM in Yemen	70
3.2.1	Setting the scene: exogenous factors influencing water governance . .	70
3.2.1.1	Political system and tribal influence	70
3.2.1.2	Demography and economy	75
3.2.1.3	Natural environment	78
3.2.1.4	Preliminary conclusion	85
3.2.2	Institutional arrangement of the water sector	86
3.2.2.1	Main actors in the water sector	86
3.2.2.2	Policies and legislation	91
3.2.2.3	Evaluation of the institutional arrangement	94
3.2.3	Current state of implementation of IWRM-principles	104
3.2.3.1	More user participation?	104
3.2.3.2	Decentralization and subsidiarity	105
3.2.3.3	Understanding of water as an economic good	107
3.2.3.4	More irrigation efficiency through demand-management? . .	109
3.2.4	Main implementation challenges	109
3.2.4.1	Understanding of IWRM	110
3.2.4.2	Organizational deficits	112
3.2.4.3	Lacking enforcement of the Water Law	114
3.2.5	Summary and preliminary conclusion	115
3.3	IWRM in Jordan	118
3.3.1	Setting the scene: exogenous factors influencing water governance . .	118
3.3.1.1	Political system and tribal structures	118
3.3.1.2	Demography and economy	122
3.3.1.3	Natural environment	125
3.3.1.4	Preliminary conclusion	131
3.3.2	Institutional arrangement of the water sector	133
3.3.2.1	Main actors	133
3.3.2.2	Policies and legislation	135
3.3.2.3	Evaluation of the institutional arrangement	136
3.3.3	Current state of implementation of IWRM-principles	144
3.3.3.1	Participation through Water User Associations	144

3.3.3.2	Steps towards decentralization in a centralized system	146
3.3.3.3	Gradual introduction and adjustment of water pricing	148
3.3.3.4	Demand-management	149
3.3.4	Main implementation challenges	152
3.3.4.1	Understanding of IWRM	152
3.3.4.2	Deficiencies in the organizational framework	154
3.3.4.3	Weak governmental enforcement mechanisms	156
3.3.5	Summary and preliminary conclusion	158
3.4	IWRM in Syria	161
3.4.1	Setting the scene: exogenous factors influencing water governance . . .	161
3.4.1.1	Governance system	161
3.4.1.2	Demography and economy	169
3.4.1.3	Natural environment	172
3.4.1.4	Preliminary conclusion	179
3.4.2	Institutional arrangement of the water sector	181
3.4.2.1	Main actors	181
3.4.2.2	Policies and legislation	186
3.4.2.3	Evaluation of the institutional arrangement	188
3.4.3	Current state of implementation of IWRM-principles	196
3.4.3.1	Participation?	197
3.4.3.2	Steps towards decentralization in a centralized system	199
3.4.3.3	Water as an economic good vs. the social welfare system . .	200
3.4.3.4	Demand-management	202
3.4.4	Main challenges to IWRM implementation	205
3.4.4.1	Understanding of IWRM	205
3.4.4.2	Centralization and lack of cooperation	207
3.4.5	Summary and preliminary conclusion	209
4	Outlook and conclusion	213
4.1	Future perspectives for IWRM in Yemen, Jordan and Syria	214
4.1.1	Top-down approach: reforming the institutional arrangement	214
4.1.2	Bottom-up approach: decentralization and local initiatives	218
4.1.3	Piecemeal approach: top-down and bottom-up measures	222
4.2	Conclusion: prospects for IWRM in the Middle East	224
	Bibliography	229
A	Acronyms and abbreviations	253
B	Glossary	257

C Interview partners, guideline and results	261
C.1 List of all interview partners	261
C.2 Guideline for semi-structured interviews	264
C.3 Overview of identified challenges	267