

Table of contents

1.	Introduction	1
1.1.	The early reception of historia ecclesiastica	4
1.1.1.	Historia ecclesiastica in modern times	8
1.2.	History and narrative. Theoretical reflections	17
1.2.1.	The formative character of history writing	23
1.2.2.	The normative character of history writing	26
2.	A complex whole	31
2.1.	Life and works of Eusebius of Caesarea	31
2.2.	Date and composition of historia ecclesiastica	35
2.2.1.	Textual reconstructions	35
2.2.2.	Composition	38
2.3.	Narrative techniques	45
2.3.1.	Principles of narration	45
2.3.2.	Stylistic Features	51
2.3.3.	The use of Quotations	58
3.	Normative Writing of History	69
3.1.	Writing ecclesiastical history	69
3.1.1.	Hellenistic history writing	69
3.1.2.	Judeo-Christian history writing.	72
3.1.3.	Aims and Program of the historia ecclesiastica	77
3.1.4.	Historia ecclesiastica viewed as history writing	80
3.1.5.	The apologetic features of historia ecclesiastica	85
3.2.	Narrating reality. Constructions of authority	89

3.2.1.	Implied Narrators and Readers	89
3.2.2.	Transmitting true Christianity	98
3.2.3.	Written history	102
4.	Staged Reality	109
4.1.	Constructing ideal Christianity	109
4.1.1.	Bishops, erudite men and other Christians	109
4.1.2.	The Pious Christian ethnos	118
4.1.3.	The one church of God	127
4.2.	The “others” of historia ecclesiastica	131
4.2.1.	Heretics, Jews and Pagans.	132
4.2.2.	The Fragility of the construction	140
5.	Narrated History	149
5.1.	Memories of time and space	149
5.1.1.	Temporal markers	149
5.1.2.	Spatial markers	154
5.2.	Secular history: The Roman Empire and the church	160
5.2.1.	The Romans of historia ecclesiastica	161
5.2.2.	Integrative endeavours	163
5.3.	Sacred history? Narratives of the history of the church	167
5.4.	History of salvation: God and his church	173
5.4.1.	Superhuman agency in historia ecclesiastica	173
5.4.2.	History of salvation: God’s history with the world	180
6.	Conclusion	187
7.	Bibliography	195