

Contents

Acknowledgments	IX
Prologue
‘No painting ever bore Greater’: Hans Holbein’s Whitehall Mural and the Tradition of the English Icon	1
Introduction	17
Chapter One
Spatial Representations of the Royal Body at Court: The Masques of James I	39
A Kingdom for a Stage: The Jacobean Court Masque	41
‘Rul’d by a sunne’: James I as Centre of Masque and Cosmos	55
A Temple for Ancient Britain: Inigo Jones’s Whitehall Banqueting House	70
Chapter Two
‘The Devil take all of you, Dance!’: Bodily Distinction in the Jacobean Court Masque and Portrait	99
Politics of Intimacy: The Role of the Minister Favourite at the Early Stuart Court	101
Fashioning the Male Courtly Body: Competitive Displays of Erotic Masculinity in the Court Masque	106
George Villiers, First Duke of Buckingham, as a Patron of the Masque	114

Performances of the Painted Body: The Portrait Commissions of the Duke of Buckingham	119
Buckingham as a Collector of Painting and Sculpture	126
Image of Devotion: Buckingham's Commission of Van Dyck's 'Venus and Adonis'	145
'The most earnest lover of painting in the world': Rubens' Equestrian Portrait of Buckingham	175
 Chapter Three
'Antwerpian Rubens' best skill made him soare': The Duke of Buckingham and the Triumph of Painting at the Court of Charles I	189
From Stage to Ceiling	197
Posthumous Portrait: Peter Paul Rubens' 'Banqueting House Ceiling'	197
Transcending the Masque: Peter Paul Rubens' Ceiling for York House	207
The Triumph of Painting	227
Inaugurating the Picture-Plane: Thomas Carew's 'Coelum Britannicum'	240
The Royal Body in the Courtly Portrait	251
Appendices	259
List of Illustrations	268
Bibliography	272
Picture Credits	302