Contents

Acknowledgements vii

List of Abbreviations viii

1 Introduction 1
   1.1 The power brokers 5
   1.2 The historiography of the German question 9

2 Between Continuity and Change: Ostpolitik and the Constructivist Approach Revisited 13
   2.1 Constructivism and foreign policy 13
   2.2 Ostpolitik as grand design 16
   2.3 Ostpolitik as identity formation 18
   2.4 Norms and the political interests of the dominant coalition 21

3 Westbindung instead of Wiedervereinigung 26
   3.1 Political conflict sets the stage 27
   3.2 The beginning of the Adenauer era 30
   3.3 From occupation powers to partners 34
   3.4 The ‘Policy of Strength’ 39

4 Reunification Policy under Pressure: Taking the Offensive 46
   4.1 The European status quo 46
   4.2 Visit to Moscow 53
   4.3 Non-recognition and the ‘Junktim’ between disarmament and reunification 58

5 The Christian Democrats Stick, the Social Democrats Swing 70
   5.1 The Hallstein doctrine 70
   5.2 Nuclear armament: Continuing the ‘Policy of Strength’ 73
   5.3 Khrushchev’s diplomatic offensive 77
   5.4 The Social Democrats swing 82
Contents

6 A Tale of Three Cities: Bonn, Berlin and Washington  89
   6.1 Berlin  90
   6.2 Kennedy's new course  92
   6.3 A 'serious breach of confidence'  95
   6.4 The Social Democrats between Bonn and Berlin  98
   6.5 An alternative reunification policy  101

7 Adenauer's Long Shadow  107
   7.1 The chancellor and the general  108
   7.2 Gaullists versus Atlanticists  111
   7.3 An unfruitful alliance  117

8 Ostpolitik on Hold  123
   8.1 The SPD as a reliable partner  123
   8.2 Team of rivals: The 'Grand Coalition'  131
   8.3 The Liberals waiting in the wings  139

9 Crossing the Rubicon: Brandt's Ostpolitik  144
   9.1 Brandt's bold move  144
   9.2 Laying the groundwork: Moscow first  147
   9.3 Balancing national and international politics  151
   9.4 The German question for the Germans to answer  155

10 Summary and Conclusions  160

Notes  170

Sources and Literature  188

Index  198