Chapter I: Socioeconomic Aspects of Art in Modern America and the Rise of the Dia Art Foundation

The Sociological Context of Contemporary American Art in the 1960s and 1970s
Earthworks in the Context of the Political Atmosphere of 1968
The New Generation of American Artists in the Postmodern Age
The United States and West Germany: A “Special Relationship”
American Funding Principles
A Case in Point: Financial Resources of the Dia Art Foundation
The Art Industry in America
The Ramifications of Socioeconomic Factors for the American Art Industry

Chapter II: Three Eras of the Dia Art Foundation 1974–2006

Second Era, 1986–1994: Rehabilitation and Penetration into the Public Sphere
Third Era, 1994–2006: Display of Dia’s Collection
An Overview of Dia’s History to 2006

Chapter III: Site-Specific Artworks and Site-Oriented Projects – a Hallmark of the Dia Art Foundation

Four Paradigms of Dia’s Activities in the Realm of Site-Specific Art
Model I: Supporting site-specific artists working in the desert of the American Southwest – Walter De Maria, The Lightning Field
The structure of The Lightning Field
The structuralist approach of Rosalind Krauss
Merleau-Ponty’s Phenomenology of Perception
Terry Eagleton’s thesis of experience through corporeal senses
Vertical objects as archetypical modes of masculine expression
The Sublime as conceived by Edmund Burke and Immanuel Kant
The mystical approach
Dia's role in The Lightning Field

Model II: Founding art institutes dedicated to a single artist –
The Dan Flavin Art Institute
Dan Flavin's alliance with Dia
Dan Flavin's art
The Dan Flavin Art Institute
Rupture and reconciliation

Model III: Collaborating with an existing project – Donald Judd's Marfa Project
The Marfa Project
100 untitled works in mill aluminum, 1982–1986
15 untitled works in concrete, 1980–1984
Judd's break with Dia
The Judd Foundation
Dia's renewed interest in the Marfa Project
Donald Judd and Giuseppe Panza

Model IV: Three Urban Exhibition Spaces
“One artist – one artwork – one space – forever”
Dia:Chelsea
Dia:Beacon
Museum or non-museum?
Summary of Dia's fourth model

Plates

Chapter IV: An Aesthetic Process: Reparation through Permanent Site-Specific Artworks in the American Desert
Contradictions Associated with the Transition from Temporality to Permanency
The Significance of Size
The Notion of Place and Space
The Desert Artworks as Pilgrimage Sites
The Site-Specific Artworks as Monuments

Bibliography
List of illustrations
Index