Contents

Contributors xiii
Acknowledgements xv
Introduction xvii

PART I
Historical: Freud coming to China 1

1 Freudianism and twentieth-century Chinese literature 3
NING WANG

2 The legacy of Freud’s China connections 24
GEOFFREY BLOWERS

PART II
Analytic: psychoanalyzing Chinese experiences 41

3 Mother and son in “Yue Zhong” by Pu Songling (1640–1715): a neo-Freudian reading of a late imperial Chinese story 43
SING-CHEN LYDIA CHIANG

4 The filial piety complex: the Oedipus complex in Chinese cultural context 60
MING DONG GU

5 Freud’s “fetishism” and the footbinding of Chinese women 86
JACK SPECTOR

6 Neither devotion nor introjection: Freudian reflections on China’s moral crisis 103
JIWEI CI
Contents

7 Psychoanalysis and modern Chinese literature: positive sublimation and politics of passion 117
BAN WANG

8 Chineseness as a liminal form of being: psychoanalysis and Eileen Chang’s “Red Rose and White Rose” 136
TE-HSUAN YEH

PART III
Comparative: Freud and classical Chinese thought – the universal versus the cultural 167

9 Freud and China: the pursuit of the self and other fugitive notions 169
LEE H. YEARLEY

10 Freud and the Dao 196
PHILIP J. IVANHOE

11 Freud and Zhuangzi: resonances and contrasts in their pursuit of the self and other fugitive notions 219
LEE H. YEARLEY

12 Xunzi’s reinterpretation of ritual: a challenge to Freud’s critique of religion 252
MARK BERKSON

13 Xuanzang and Freud: a Buddhist–Freudian engagement on the subliminal mind 278
TAO JIANG

Index 302