Contents

Abbreviations and signs
1. Introduction
   1.1. The language and its speakers
   1.2. The dialects
   1.3. The status as language isolate
   1.4. Language contact
   1.5. On the content of the monograph
2. Investigations into the typology of Burushaski
   2.1. Introduction
   2.2. Issues in morphophonology
      2.2.1. A nasal alternation
      2.2.2. The mutations
   2.3. Issues in the morphology of the verb
      2.3.1. The category of polarity
      2.3.2. The negative prefix and the interrogative suffix
      2.3.3. Verb forms without a stem
      2.3.4. Person marking I: On the shape of the affixes
      2.3.5. Person marking II: On the use of the affixes
   2.4. Some afterthoughts
3. The dialects and the comparative method
   3.1. Introduction
   3.2. Consonants
      3.2.1. Affricates
      3.2.2. Clusters of nasal and plosive
      3.2.3. Other topics
   3.3. Vowels
      3.3.1. The back vowels o and u
      3.3.2. The front vowels e and i
      3.3.3. Other topics
   3.4. The “grass group”
   3.5. Suprasegmentals
   3.6. Vocabulary
   3.7. Morphology
      3.7.1. Introduction
      3.7.2. Singulants from former plurals
Contents

3.7.3. Some observations on possessor marking 102
3.8. Other levels of language structure 106

4. Internal reconstruction in Burushaski 107
  4.1. Introduction 107
    4.1.1. Internal reconstruction 107
    4.1.2. Internal reconstruction in Burushaski so far 108
    4.1.3. Objectives of the chapter 110
  4.2. Phonology 111
    4.2.1. An ancient vowel alternation 111
    4.2.2. The consonant alternations n / y and s / š 115
    4.2.3. Alternation of the retroflex fricative and h 117
    4.2.4. Voicing after nasals and after l 120
  4.3. Morphology 122
    4.3.1. The numerals from 'one' to 'ten' 122
    4.3.2. The remnants of the numeral 'two' in body parts 126
    4.3.3. On 'to be' 130
  4.4. Syntax 133
    4.4.1. The rise of the system of local cases 133
    4.4.2. The rise of an adjective type 135
  4.5. On stress in Burushaski 136
    4.5.1. Introduction 136
    4.5.2. Main claims 137
    4.5.3. Stress in morphological forms 140
    4.5.4. Prehistory of the consonant group št 143
    4.5.5. Summary of the events 145
  4.6. Final reflections 146

5. On the vocabulary of Burushaski 149
  5.1. Introduction 149
  5.2. Polysemy and homophony 151
  5.3. The suffix -c 155
  5.4. On some kinship terms 158

References 161
Indices 171
  Subject index 171
  Language index 173
  Word index 176