Contents

Acknowledgements ........................................................................................................... ix

1. Introduction .................................................................................................................. 1
   1.1 Definition of Passing ................................................................................................. 2
   1.2 Aims and Guiding Questions ................................................................................... 5
   1.3 Textual Corpus ........................................................................................................ 5
   1.4 Methodology ........................................................................................................... 6
   1.5 Structure of Further Chapters ................................................................................ 7

2. Passing and Concepts of Identity .................................................................................. 10
   2.1 Essentialist Notions of Identity .............................................................................. 10
      2.1.1 Essentialism with Regard to Sex and Gender .................................................... 10
      2.1.2 Essentialism with Regard to Sexuality .............................................................. 12
      2.1.3 Essentialism with Regard to Race ..................................................................... 13
   2.2 Reactions against Essentialism ............................................................................... 14
      2.2.1 “Biology Is Not Destiny!”: Decoupling Bodily Differences from Social Identities ........................................................................................................... 14
      2.2.2 Deconstructing Biology and the Humanist Subject: Performative Concepts of Identity ........................................................................................................... 16
   2.3 Passing between Essentialist and Performative Notions of Identity ................. 23
   2.4 Referential versus Performative Understandings of Literature ..................... 27

3. Passing in the Age of the Memoir: Stigmatised Identities in Life Narratives .......... 29
   3.1 Recurring Patterns in Memoirs about Passing ...................................................... 31
      3.1.1 Discovering One’s Stigma: The Experience of Discrimination and Shame .................... 31
      3.1.2 Hiding the Stigma: The Experience of Passing ................................................ 36
      3.1.3 Giving Up Passing and Coming Out .................................................................. 43
      3.1.4 Interpretation and Qualifying Statements ....................................................... 46
   3.2 Functions of Life Narratives about Passing ......................................................... 48
      3.2.1 Memoirs as “Scriptotherapy” for the Individual Author ................................ 48
      3.2.2 Memoirs as Sources of Information for the Public ........................................... 52
      3.2.3 Interim Summary .............................................................................................. 64
   3.3 Theoretical and Socio-Political Implications of the Memoir Boom ................... 65
      3.3.1 Memoirs as ‘Counterstories’ ............................................................................. 65
      3.3.2 Memoirs as Guilty Confession: Foucauldian Approaches ............................ 68
      3.3.3 Memoirs as Partial Invention .......................................................................... 70
      3.3.4 Interim Summary .............................................................................................. 74
   3.4 Conclusion .............................................................................................................. 75

4.1 “JT LeRoy” and “Misha Defonseca” as Memorial Writers?
4.1.1 Preliminary Considerations: Memoirs between Fact and Fiction
4.1.2 The JT LeRoy Hoax: The Heart Is Deceitful as Memoir?
4.1.3 The Misha Defonseca Hoax: Misha as Memoir?
4.2 Functions, Effects and Ethical Aspects of the Hoaxes
4.2.1 Fake Memoirs as “Scriptotherapy” for the Authors?
4.2.2 Effects of the Hoaxes on the Public
4.2.3 Excursus: Functions of Misery Memoirs for the Reader
4.2.4 Interim Summary: Ethical Aspects of Fake Memoirs
4.3 Theoretical Implications of Fake Memoirs
4.3.1 Identity as Performativity versus as Essence
4.3.2 Fact versus Fiction or Panfictionality?
4.4 Conclusion

5. Showing One’s Colours: The Persistence of Race and Ethnicity in Novels of Racial Passing

5.1 Danzy Senna, Caucasia (1998)
5.1.1 Denaturalising Essentialist Assumptions about Race
5.1.2 Defying Eliminativism: Race as Social and Psychological Reality
5.1.3 Narrative Technique: Racial Contextualism and the Tendency towards Neo-Realism
5.2 Achmat Dangor, Kafka’s Curse (1997)
5.2.1 Denaturalising Essentialist Assumptions about Race
5.2.2 Repudiation of Eliminativism and Narrative Technique
5.2.3 Interim Summary
5.3 Hari Kunzru, The Impressionist (2002)
5.3.1 Denaturalising Essentialist Assumptions about Race
5.3.2 Defying Eliminativism: The Flipside of Postmodern Subjectivity
5.3.3 Narrative Technique: The More Things Change, the More They Stay the Same
5.3.4 Interim Summary
5.4.1 Denaturalising Essentialist Assumptions about Race
5.4.2 Defying Eliminativism: The Relevance of Racial Categories
5.4.3 Interim Summary
5.5 Conclusion
8.3 Writing and Reading the Self: Passing on the Part of Narrators and Readers ......................................................... 214
8.4 Conclusion ........................................................................... 217

9. A Wolf in Sheep’s Clothing: The Morbid Discourse and Multiple Forms of Passing in Jeff Lindsay’s Dexter Novels ................................................................. 219
  9.1 Dexter’s Passing ..................................................................... 219
  9.1.1 Wanted: Dexter Morgan .................................................. 219
  9.1.2 Strategies of Concealment ............................................. 221
  9.2 Becoming a Monster: The Concept of Criminal Identity ...... 225
     9.2.1 The Social-Constructionist Discourse ....................... 226
     9.2.2 The Biologicist Discourse ........................................ 228
     9.2.3 The Demonological Discourse .................................. 231
  9.3 Narratorial Passing: How the Reader is Charmed by Dexter ... 233
  9.4 Passing on the Part of the Reader, or Everybody’s Dexter .... 234
  9.5 Conclusion .......................................................................... 236

10. Conclusion ........................................................................... 238
    10.1 Goffman’s Pioneering Role and Recurring Elements in Passing Narratives ......................................................... 238
    10.2 Concepts of Identity and Social Activism ....................... 239
        10.2.1 Analysis of Identity Concepts in General .............. 240
        10.2.2 Analysis of Passing in Specific ........................... 242
    10.3 Narrative Technique, Genre and Style .......................... 244
        10.3.1 Generic Considerations ........................................ 245
        10.3.2 Interrelations between the Passing Motif and Narrative Technique ................................................................. 245
        10.3.3 Passing on Different Levels of Literary Communication ....................................................... 246
    10.4 Outlook ........................................................................... 247

11. Works Cited .......................................................................... 249
    11.1 Primary Literature ........................................................... 249
    11.2 Secondary Literature ....................................................... 251