Contents

1 Introduction: Nondemocracies in a Changing Era ........................................ 1
   1.1 The Habitual Way of Thinking About Nondemocracies and What Is Puzzling Today ....................................................... 2
   1.2 The Changing Milieu of World Politics ...................................... 5
      1.2.1 The Intangible Aspects of Nondemocratic Incentive: Reputation .......................................................... 6
      1.2.2 Managing Openness: A New Challenge ............................... 8
   1.3 External Openness and Internal Openness in Contemporary China ... 9
   1.4 Disaster Management: Why Study It, and How? ......................... 13
      1.4.1 What Type of Disasters? ............................................... 15
      1.4.2 Studying Disaster Management from the Perspective of Top-Down Coordination ................................................ 16
   References .................................................................................. 17

2 Evolvement of Disaster Management Practices in China: A Trend Toward Greater Openness .............................................. 21
   2.1 The Evolvement of China’s Disaster Management Policy and Institutional Apparatus ......................................................... 23
      2.1.1 Insisting on Self-reliance: A Closed-door Disaster Management Policy .............................................................. 24
      2.1.2 Seeking Legitimate International Recognition: The Start of Opening-up in Disaster Management ............................ 27
      2.1.3 Integrating into the International Community: Increased Cooperation and Transparency in Disaster Management  ........ 31