Contents

Acknowledgments vii

Introduction: “Distant Reading” and the Historiography of Nineteenth-Century German Literature 1
  Matt Erlin and Lynne Tatlock

I: Quantification

1: Burrows’s Delta and Its Use in German Literary History 29
  Fotis Jannidis and Gerhard Lauer

2: The Location of Literary History: Topic Modeling, Network Analysis, and the German Novel, 1731–1864 55
  Matt Erlin

3: How to Read 22,198 Journal Articles: Studying the History of German Studies with Topic Models 91
  Allen Beye Riddell

4: Serial Individuality: Eighteenth-Century Case Study Collections and Nineteenth-Century Archival Fiction 115
  Nicolas Pethes

5: The Case for Close Reading after the Descriptive Turn 133
  Todd Kontje

II: Circulation

6: The Werther Effect I: Goethe, Objecthood, and the Handling of Knowledge 155
  Andrew Piper and Mark Algee-Hewitt

7: Rethinking Nonfiction: Distant Reading the Nineteenth-Century Science-Literature Divide 185
  Peter M. McIsaac

8: Distant Reception: Bringing German Books to America 209
  Kirsten Belgum
9: The One and the Many: The Old Mam'selle's Secret and the American Traffic in German Fiction (1868–1917)
Lynne Tutlock

229

III: Contextualization

10: The Vocations of the Novel: Distant-Reading Occupational Change in Nineteenth-Century German Literature
Tobias Boes

259

11: Big Data, Pattern Recognition, and Literary Studies: N-Gramming the Railway in Nineteenth-Century German Fiction
Paul A. Youngman and Ted Carmichael

285

12: “Detoured Reading”: Understanding Literature through the Eyes of Its Contemporaries (A Case Study on Anti-Semitism in Gustav Freytag’s Soll und Haben)
Katja Mellmann

301

13: Can Computers Read?
Lutz Koepnich

333

Selected Bibliography

347

Contributors

371

Index

375