Table of Contents

Plates —— 9

Introduction —— 25
  Sources and research —— 34

Preparation and research concept —— 38
  The education of Ernst Boerschmann and his early work for the military —— 38
  Heinrich Hildebrand and the documentation of the Temple of Enlightenment (1891–1897) —— 43
  Joseph Dahlmann and religion in the Far East —— 47
  Boerschmann’s memorandum about research in Chinese architecture (1905) —— 49
  Karl Bachem and the German Reichstag —— 50
  The Temple of Azure Clouds —— 52
  Fritz Jobst at Jietai Temple (1905) —— 65
  Franz Baltzer and Japanese architecture —— 68
  Architecture and the religious culture of the Chinese —— 72

Field trips in China (1906–1909) —— 74
  On the way to China (1906) —— 74
  First winter in Beijing (1906–1907) —— 75
  Trip to the Eastern Qing Tombs (March–April 1907) —— 86
  Trip to Chengde (May–June 1907) —— 91
  Beijing and the Western Hills (June–August 1907) —— 102
  From the Western Qing Tombs to Mount Wutai (August–September 1907) —— 115
  From Shanxi to Shandong Province (September–December 1907) —— 128
  Trip to Zhejiang (December 1907–Spring 1908) —— 157
  Mount Putuo (January 1908) —— 174
  Jiangsu Province (Spring 1908) —— 187
  The great trip to the West: Taiyuan, Shanxi Province (April–May 1908) —— 196
  From Pingyao to Mengcheng, Shanxi Province (May 1908) —— 207
  Feng Shui pillars and towers for Kui Xing in Shanxi Province —— 223
  From sacred Mount Hua to Xi’an, Shaanxi Province (June 1908) —— 228
  From Fengxian to Mianxian, Shaanxi Province (July 1908) —— 241
  From Guangyuan to Chengdu, Sichuan Province (July–August 1908) —— 247
  From Duijiangyan to sacred Mount Emei and Leshan, Sichuan Province (August–September 1908) —— 261
  From Yibin to Fengjie, Sichuan Province (September–November 1908) —— 281
  From Yichang to sacred Mount Heng, Hunan Province (November 1908–January 1909) —— 299
  From Guilin in Guangxi Province to Wuzhou in Guangdong Province (February 1909) —— 314
  In Guangzhou, Guangdong Province (February–March 1909) —— 322
  In Fuzhou, Fujian Province and the return to Beijing (March to May 1909) —— 333

Boerschmann’s research results (1909–1931) —— 340
  Back in Berlin: Working through the collected material (1909–1911) —— 340

Bibliografische Informationen
http://d-nb.info/1059129183
The first book – Mount Putuo (1911) — 352
Exhibition of Chinese architecture in Berlin (1912) — 373
The book about memorial temples (1914) — 385
A German Scientific Institute in Beijing and further publications about Chinese architecture in Germany — 413
In the service of the army (1914–1921) — 418
Asian Architecture in Germany after the First World War — 419
Boerschmann’s return to research in Chinese architecture (1921) — 427
Baukunst und Landschaft in China (Picturesque China) (1923) — 427
Chinesische Architektur (Chinese architecture) in two volumes (1925) — 435
Ceramics in Chinese architecture (1927) — 450
Pagodas (1931) — 465

Conclusion: Documenting a vanishing culture — 502
Boerschmann’s documentation of Chinese architecture in a changing socio-political environment — 502
Working methods in China and in Germany — 506
Space and distance: theoretical and practical problems with architecture in China — 510
Exploring the sacred mountains in search of religious architecture — 518
The layout of the city in relation to the landscape — 526
Pagodas: Creating harmony between urban settings and the landscape — 537
The temple as an arrangement of spatial units — 548
Boerschmann’s goals and achievements up to 1931 — 553
Postscript — 556

Addendum — 559
The Chinese religious pantheon in Boerschmann’s work — 559
Ernst Boerschmann in the context of German-Chinese relations and research into Chinese architecture (1860–1949) — 565

Literature — 568
Archives — 568
Literature — 568

Chinese Dynasties and Emperors — 583
Ancient — 583
Imperial — 583
Modern — 583

Index — 584
Historic Events, Persons and Deities — 584
Persons — 586
Places — 589

Photocredits — 592
Abbreviations for the images — 592