CHAPTER ONE: GENERAL INTRODUCTION

1.0 Introduction
1.1 Research problem
1.2 Goal and objectives of the study
1.3 Scope and research question
   1.3.1 Scope
   1.3.2 Research question and indications
1.4 Previous researches (and linguistic classification)
   1.4.1 Linguistic classification
   1.4.2 Geographical situation
1.5 The ethno-history of the Mankon dialect cluster people
1.6 The issue of onomastics or naming of objects
   1.6.1 The ‘ba-’ prefix in the Ngemba onomastic
   1.6.2 Language family and mutual intelligibility
1.7 Overview of the study

CHAPTER TWO: RESEARCH METHODOLOGIES AND APPROACHES USED FOR THIS STUDY

2.0 Introduction
2.1 The dialectometry model/technique
   2.1.1 Dialectometric data elicitation
   2.1.2 Dialectometric lexical data analysis procedure
      2.1.2.1 Grading system for the lexical similarity and divergence
   2.1.3 Dialectometric phonetic similarity or difference data analysis procedure
      2.1.3.1 The procedural phases
      2.1.3.1.1 Rank of stricture scaling scheme
2.2 Structural similarities or differences in phonological systems (typological approach)
   2.2.1 Degree of phonetic difference approach
   2.2.2 Isogloss approach
   2.2.3 Typological approach
2.3 Rapid appraisal-recorded text testing (RA-RTT) method
   2.3.1 Recorded text testing (RTT) data collection
   2.3.2 Rapid appraisal-recorded text test analysis
      2.3.2.1 RA-RTT grading scale
2.4 Sociolinguistic survey technique

xii
2.4.1 Questionnaire and interview data collection 45
2.4.2 Questionnaires analyses method 46
2.5 Standard or reference variety selection technique 46
   2.5.1 Fundamental criteria for selection of reference variety 46
   2.5.2 Secondary criteria for selection of reference variety 47
   2.5.3 Marginal factors for the selection of the standard variety 47
2.6 Summary of the chapter 48

CHAPTER THREE: THE PHONOLOGY OF THE MANKON DIALECT CLUSTER
3.0 Introduction 49
3.1 The phonology of the Mankon dialect cluster 49
   3.1.1 Consonants 49
      3.1.1.1 The status of consonant clusters in this dialect cluster 54
      3.1.1.1.1 Labialisation and palatalisation 54
      3.1.1.1.2 Homorganic nasal assimilation 58
   3.1.2 Vowels of the Mankon dialect cluster 60
      3.1.2.1 Distribution and evidence of combining phonetic variants 60
   3.1.3 The syllable and morpheme structure 63
   3.1.4 The tonemes 64
3.2 Summary of the chapter 65

CHAPTER FOUR: LEXICAL AND PHONOLOGICAL DIALECTOMETRIC ANALYSES OF THE MANKON DIALECT CLUSTER
4.0 Introduction 66
4.1 Lexical dialectometric analysis of the Mankon dialect cluster 67
   4.1.1 Lexical comparison 67
   4.1.2 Lexical divergence statistical quantification 71
   4.1.3 Lexical dialectometric analysis 71
   4.1.4 Presentation and interpretation of lexical proximity results 73
      4.1.4.1 Lexical proximity matrix presentation format 73
      4.1.4.1.1 Interpretation of the lexical matrices results 75
      4.1.4.2 Lexical proximity cartogram 76
      4.1.4.2.1 Interpretation of lexical cartograph results 78
      4.1.4.3 Lexical group-bar graph for the Mankon dialect cluster 80
      4.1.4.3.1 Interpretation of the lexical proximity group-bar graph results 81
   4.2 Phonological dialectometric procedures ('degree of phonetic similarity or difference measurement') 82
      4.2.1 Phonological (dialectometry) comparison of data 82
      4.2.2 Phonological difference degree computation 85
      4.2.3 Presentation and interpretation of phonological difference results 88
         4.2.3.1 Phonological difference matrix 88
         4.2.3.2 Interpretation of phonological matrix results 88
4.3. The typological approach to compare phonological relationship
4.3.1 Comparison of phonetic systems
4.3.1.1 Consonant sound systems
4.3.1.2 Vowel sound systems
   4.3.1.2.1 Comparison of the distribution positions within a word in the cluster
   4.3.1.2.2 The environment of distribution of the divergent vowel phonemes
      4.3.1.2.2.1 The sound /o/ and /ɔ/
   4.3.1.2.3 Typological vowel feature comparison
4.3.2 Tone systems comparison
4.3.3 Syllable structure comparison
4.3.4 Comparison of the noun class systems
4.4 Summary of the chapter

CHAPTER FIVE: LEXICAL DIALECTOMETRY OF THE TWO 'AKUMS' IN CAMEROON
5.0 Introduction
5.1 Current classification of the two Akum speech forms
   5.1.1 Akum [akum] (Bagangu)
   5.1.2 Akum [ąkùm] (Aokuem or Okum)
5.2 Lexical dialectometry of the two Akums
5.3 Onomastic problem?
5.4 Summary of the chapter

CHAPTER SIX: INTELLIGIBILITY SURVEY FOR THE MANKON DIALECT CLUSTER
6.0 Introduction
6.1 Text elicitation
6.2 Collecting and structuring of the texts
   6.2.1 The text translation process
6.3 Screening and selection of the subjects or candidates
   6.3.1 Screening phase
6.4 Subject profiles
6.5 Administering the tests
6.6 Intelligibility test results
6.7 Subject profiles of RTT best and worst performers
6.8 Presentation of the RTT results
6.9 Interpretation of the RTT results
6.10 Summary of the chapter

CHAPTER SEVEN: SOCIOLINGUISTIC SURVEY OF THE MANKON DIALECT CLUSTER
7.0 Introduction
CHAPTER EIGHT: CHOSING A STANDARD VARIETY FOR THE MANKON SPEECH COMMUNITY

8.0 Introduction 136
8.1 Explanation of terminologies 137
  8.1.1 Reference or standard variety 137
  8.1.2 Dialectal conflict or acrimony 138
  8.1.3 Dialectal conflict resolution 138
8.2 The choice of a reference variety for the Mankon dialect cluster 138
  8.2.1 Assessment of the dialects for the choice of a reference variety 140
    8.2.1.1 Contextual inference of the results 141
      8.2.1.1.1 Primary/fundamental criteria 141
      8.2.1.1.2 Secondary criteria 143
    8.2.2 The reference variety choice as determined by the evaluation 145
8.3 Dialectal conflict diagnosis 146
  8.3.1 External factors influencing the Akum’s attitude towards the proposed reference variety 147
    8.3.1.1 Poorly defined ethnic ties (ethnicity politics) 147
    8.3.1.2 The quest for socio-political identity 148
  8.3.2 Internal factor influencing the Akum’s attitude towards the proposed reference variety 148
    8.3.2.1 The Boma’s fraction session attempt 148
8.4 Dialectal conflict resolution 149
8.4.1 Option I: Mankon should be developed as the reference variety for the entire cluster
8.4.1.1 Structural conceptualization of changing the negative attitude
8.4.2 Option II: Development of all the varieties but focus on Mankon as reference that will integrate the other dialects as variants
8.5 Summary of the chapter

CHAPTER NINE: EMPOWERMENT OF THE REFERENCE OR STANDARD VARIETY (NKon) FOR THE CLUSTER
9.0 Introduction
9.1 Linguistic measures of language empowerment
  9.1.1 Provision of appropriate orthography
    9.1.1.1 Testing the orthography
  9.1.2 Provision of a functional and acceptable writing system
    9.1.2.1 Developing written literature
  9.1.3 An extensive documentation
    9.1.3.1 Focal points of anthropological documentation
9.2 Human measures of language empowerment
  9.2.1 Provision of a functional and practical literacy programme
    9.2.1.1 The success story of mother tongue literacy programme in Cameroon
    9.2.1.2 The case of the Nkon mother tongue literacy programme
  9.2.2 Instituting positive attitude towards the language
    9.2.2.1 The attitude of the native speakers or users towards their language
    9.2.2.2 The attitude of the government towards the development of the language
    9.2.2.3 The attitude of the society towards the language
    9.2.2.3.1 The role of mother instructors in empowering the language
    9.2.2.3.2 Empowerment of the mother tongue by non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and private institutions
9.3 Summary of the chapter

CHAPTER TEN: GENERAL CONCLUSION AND RECOMMENDATIONS
10.0 Summary of findings
10.1 How related are the speech varieties in the Mankon dialect cluster?
10.2 The role of ethno-historical and socio-political issues in shaping the language policy for the Mankon dialect cluster
10.3 The way forward
10.4 Conclusion and recommendations
  10.4.1 Recommendations
