Table of Contents

Acknowledgements .......................................................................................................................... 9

Introduction ..................................................................................................................................... 11

Chapter I: The Literary Image, Autobiography and Biography .................................................. 15

1.0 Introduction ............................................................................................................................... 15
1.1 The Author and Interpretation ................................................................................................. 16
1.2 The Literary Image, Reputation and Literary Fame ............................................................... 18
1.3 Biography and Literary Image .................................................................................................. 25
1.4 Authorial Self-creation in Autobiographical Writing ............................................................... 32
1.5 Conclusions .............................................................................................................................. 36

Chapter II: The Biographies of Frederick Rolfe ......................................................................... 39

2.0 Introduction ............................................................................................................................... 39
2.1 An Outline of Frederick William Rolfe's Biography and Character ....................................... 39
2.2 Rolfe's Biographies as a Means for the Self-portrayal of their Authors ................................ 49
2.2.1 The Aberdeen Attack and Shane Leslie's Article ............................................................... 50
2.3 The Literary Images of a Biographer and His Subject in A. J. A. Symons' The Quest for Corvo ....................................................................................................................... 54
2.3.1 Symons' innovative approach to biography .................................................................... 54
2.3.2 Symons' depiction of eccentrics and literary circles ......................................................... 59
2.3.3 Symons' handling of his sources and Rolfe's works ......................................................... 62
2.3.4 Criticisms of Symons' Biography .................................................................................... 69
2.3.5 Conclusions ....................................................................................................................... 72
2.4 Donald Weeks' Corvo ................................................................................................................ 73
2.5 Miriam J. Benkovitz's Frederick Rolfe: Baron Corvo .............................................................. 84
2.6 The Historical Rolfe and Rolfe/Corvo the Literary Construct .............................................. 88
2.7 A Discursive Handling of Rolfe's Sexuality ............................................................................ 90
2.8 Conclusions: The Corvo Image ............................................................................................... 92
Chapter III: The Projection of the Author's Image in His Fiction: Frederick Rolfe and his Hadrian the Seventh ...

3.1. Introduction: Frederick Rolfe in the Tradition of the British Decadence ...

3.2. Hadrian the Seventh: Autobiography and Fiction against Autofiction and Fantasy ...

3.2.1 The Religious Anarchist: Rolfe's Literary Image as Rendered by the Religious Themes in Hadrian the Seventh ...

3.2.2 Rolfe's Political and Social Beliefs Basing on Hadrian the Seventh ...

3.2.3 Mitigation and Self-justification of the Author: The Portrayal of George Arthur Rose ...

3.2.4 The Fragmented Author ...

3.3 Conclusion ...

Chapter IV: Nicholas Crabbe: Between Autobiography and Fiction ...

4.0 Introduction ...

4.1 One or Many? A Comparison of the Various Depictions of Nicholas Crabbe ...

4.2 Nicholas Crabbe of Nicholas Crabbe or the One and the Many ...

4.3 Nicholas Crabbe of The Desire and Pursuit of the Whole ...

4.4 The Use of Letters in Rolfe's Books of the Crabbe Cycle ...

4.5 The Motif of the Search for The Divine Friend in Rolfe's Crabbe Novels ...

4.6 Conclusion ...

Chapter V: The Letters of Frederick Rolfe ...

5.0 Introduction ...

5.1 Frederick Rolfe's Self-presentation in His Correspondence ...

5.2 Rolfe's Self-depiction and Reception Based on Letters to his Publishers and Literary Agents, 1896–1913 ...

5.3 Rolfe's Self-depiction and Reception Based on Letters to His Personal Acquaintances, 1899–1913 ...

5.4 Conclusion ...