Table of contents

Introduction
1. Chapter 1: Lady Gaga as (dis)simulacrum of monstrosity
   1.1 Introduction: Lady Gaga, the world’s most influential artist
   1.2 Is Lady Gaga, the mother monster, really monstrous?
   1.3 Gaga is fake monstrosity, long live monster Gaga
   1.4 On the multiple regimes of Lady Gaga as sign system
   1.5 Conclusions: Hyperdifferentiation is not monstrosity
   Appendix 1.1. Lady Gaga’s original manifesto of little monsters
   Appendix 1.2. Screenshot of littlemonsters.com
   References

Chapter 2: Fetish, taboo, simulacrum: An applied psychoanalytic/semiotic approach to the experiential consumption of music products
2.1 Introduction: Aims and scope of this study
2.2 Psychoanalysis and semiotics
2.3 Fetish, taboo, simulacrum: The triadic definition of the music product
   2.3.1 Simulacrum and phantasm
   2.3.2 Fetish and petit objet a
2.4 Taboo and the arché-signifier of the phallus
2.5 Mirror-mirror on the … record-cover: The primacy of the mirror-stage in inter-subjective specular experiential consumption
2.6 Hedonism vs. Jouissance: The ec-static facet of experiential consumption
2.7 Methodology
   2.7.1 Aim and objectives
   2.7.2 Data collection methods
   2.7.3 Discourse analysis as data analysis method
2.8 Discussion of research findings
2.8.1 The function of music products as fetishes or small objects a: The case for libidinally cathected cultural products
2.8.2 The function of music products as taboos: [No] access to the Real as cultural glue for collective neo-tribal experiences
2.8.3 The function of music products as simulacra: Visual and oral signifiers as cultural glue for collective neo-tribal experiences
2.9 Conclusions and recommendations for future research
Appendix 2.1. Focus groups informants’ profile
References

Chapter 3: A Dio: A sociosemiotic/phenomenological account of the formation of collective narrative identity in the context of a rock legend’s memorial
3.1 Introduction: The memorial event as semiotic resource for shaping collective narrative identity
3.2 Collective narrative identity as the outcome of a semiotic resource’s interpersonal metafunction
3.3 The death of a rock legend as ideational substratum for solidifying the fandom’s collective identity
3.4 The textual underpinnings of Dio’s memorial event
   3.4.1 Cultural artifacts or iconic semiotic resources inscribed in external paraphernalia
   3.4.2 The ritualistic gesture of the devil horn
   3.4.3 The mediatization of the ritualistic gaze
   3.4.4 The memorial space as division of the mourning’s labor
   3.4.5 The narrative and rhetorical structure of the featured commemorative speeches
3.5 Conclusions: For a phenomenologically enriched sociosemiotic study of iconic artists’ memorials

References

http://d-nb.info/1064845517
Chapter 4: Rapunzel, Benjamin Button and Little Red Riding Hood in this and any other possible world: Philosophical, rhetorical and textual semiotic excursions in inter-textual formations amongst advertising, literary and filmic texts

4.1 Introduction: Metalinguistic and possible worlds approaches to counterfactuals
4.2 How to get there from here in 2 basic steps: Textual semiotic ticket-to-ride
4.3 Rhetorical operations and propositional attitudes as conditions of possibility of other worlds
4.4 Rapunzel for...life/world: Hair-extension is fabular
4.5 Conclusion: Implications for brand textuality

Chapter 5: Is the semiosphere post-modernist?

5.1 Introduction
5.2 What is the semiosphere (and what is not 'it')?
5.2.1 Semiosphere(s) vs. sphere(s)
5.2.2 Semiotic space(s)
5.2.3 Markers of spatial orientation (inside/outside, centre/periphery)
5.2.4 Demarcation markers (boundary/ies)
5.3 Kant's modernist conceptualization of space as pure form of intuition
5.4 Why the semiosphere is and is not modernist
5.5 Post-modernist conceptions of space, discursivity and subjectivity: Foucault and Deleuze in focus
5.5.1 Lotman vs. Foucault
5.5.2 Lotman vs. Deleuze (& Guattari)
5.6 Conclusion

Chapter 6: For a semiotic model of cultural branding and the dynamic management of a brandosphere in the face of user-generated advertising

6.1 Lotman's cultural semiotics as conceptual platform for edifying the brandosphere
6.2 The principal aims of the cultural branding model of brandosphere
6.3 User-generated advertising in focus
6.3.1 The role of UGC and UGA in a diverse social-media landscape
6.3.2 Why draw on the semiotic conceptual heritage for edifying the cultural branding model of the brandosphere, rather than use a cultural branding model already on offer in the marketing literature while examining UGA?
6.4 Expected contributions of the brandosphere to the extant marketing (semiotic) literature and practice

Chapter 7: The ice-bucket challenge: The legitimacy of the memetic mode of cultural reproduction is the message

7.1 Memes as minimal units of cultural reproduction
7.2 Deconstructing the formal structure of the ice-bucket challenge video meme
7.3 Interpretation of the function(s) of the video meme as exchanges in a structural edifice
7.4 Conclusions and areas for further research

References