

Contents

Foreword . . . . .	VII
Abbreviations . . . . .	XIII
Introduction . . . . .	1
1. The historization of Barth and biographical overview . . . . .	9
The historization of Barth . . . . .	9
Biographical overview . . . . .	16
1886–1909 Family background and study. . . . .	17
1909–1921 Pastor in Switzerland. . . . .	19
1921–1935 Professor in Germany. . . . .	21
2. Society, politics and culture around 1900 . . . . .	22
The old bourgeoisie and the new socialists . . . . .	22
Radical youth . . . . .	27
WWI, anti-liberalism and radical socialisms . . . . .	30
3. Theology and Religious Socialism around 1900 . . . . .	40
German language Protestant theology around 1900 . . . . .	40
Religious Socialism around 1900 . . . . .	51
4. Weimar Protestantism and the Barth-Gogarten Group . . . . .	57
Protestantism in the Weimar Republic . . . . .	57
The Barth–Gogarten Group . . . . .	62
Chapter One: Socialism, Marburg and WWI (1905–1919) . . . . .	71
1. Early socialist writings and Marburg theology . . . . .	73
2. WWI, Religious Socialism, Friedrich Naumann and Martin Rade . . . . .	93
3. Post–1914 Religious Socialism, the Third International and WWI . . . . .	107
Post–1914 Religious Socialism . . . . .	107
The Third International . . . . .	125
WWI and Barth’s intellectual development . . . . .	130
Chapter Two: Romans , Overbeck, Harnack and Ethics (1919–1931) . . . . .	141
1. Romans 1919, Franz Overbeck and the Tambach Address . . . . .	141
Romans 1919 . . . . .	141
Friedrich Naumann, Woodrow Wilson and the League of Nations . . . . .	151
“The Christian in society” (Tambach Address) and “From being right and being wrong” . . . . .	155

Franz Overbeck and “Unresolved inquiries into today’s theology” . . . . .	162
2. Romans 1922, Paul Althaus, Alfred Daniel and Adolf von Harnack . . . . .	168
Romans 1922 . . . . .	169
Paul Althaus and “Fundamental questions of Christian social ethics” (spring 1922) . . . . .	183
“Letter to the Christian communist” (July, 1922) and “The Word of God as assignment of theology” (October, 1922) . . . . .	187
Harnack – Barth correspondence (January–May, 1923) . . . . .	190
3. Piper Case, Wilhelm Stapel, Ethics, “How long?” . . . . .	196
Piper Case (July 19–31, 1923) and an academic gathering in Göttingen . . . . .	196
Public correspondence with Wilhelm Stapel (April–June, 1926) . . . . .	200
Ethics Lectures (Münster and Bonn, 1928–1931) . . . . .	205
“How long?” (“Quousque tandem?” 1930) . . . . .	217
 Chapter Three: The Dehn Case (1931–1932) . . . . .	 221
1. Statement on the Dehn Case and “Questions to ‘Christianity’” . . . . .	222
Background of the Günther Dehn Case . . . . .	222
“Questions to ‘Christianity’” (December, 1931) . . . . .	230
2. Article on the Dehn Case and correspondence with Emanuel Hirsch . . . . .	232
Barth’s article in the Hochschulblatt der Frankfurter Zeitung on the Dehn Case (February, 1932) . . . . .	237
3. “Protestantism of the present” . . . . .	247
 Chapter Four: National Socialism and Theological existence today! (1932–1935) . . . . .	 255
1. The Altona Confession, 1933 and the Young Reformation Movement . . . . .	255
The Altona Confession (January 11, 1933) . . . . .	255
First responses to Hitler’s rise to power . . . . .	258
German Christians and the Young Reformation Movement . . . . .	266
2. Theological existence today! 1–2, Miles Bouton, “Departure” from Between the Times . . . . .	273
Theological existence today! (Theologische Existenz heute! Nr. 1, June 25, 1933) . . . . .	273
“For the freedom of the gospel” ( Theologische Existenz heute! Nr. 2, July 22, 1933) and fall correspondences . . . . .	289
“Departure” from Between the Times (October 18, 1933) . . . . .	297
3. Theological existence today! 3–5, Memorandum, Barmen, Open Letters from Switzerland . . . . .	299
“Reformation as decision” ( Theologische Existenz heute! Nr. 3, October 30–31, 1933) . . . . .	299
“Counter-theses to the Rengsdorf Theses” and Public correspondence with Heinz Giessel (November, 1933) . . . . .	302
“The Church of Jesus Christ” ( Theologische Existenz heute! Nr. 5, November–December, 1933) . . . . .	308

Memorandum to Hitler (January, 1934) . . . . .	312
The Barmen Declaration (1934) . . . . .	317
Barth's Oath to Hitler (November–December, 1934) . . . . .	328
Open letter to Hermann Albert Hesse (June 30, 1935) and Gotthilf Weber (July 2, 1935) . . . . .	343
 Chapter Five: Sociopolitical and cultural issues . . . . .	 351
1. Barth, Dialectical Theology and National Socialism . . . . .	351
2. The Jews . . . . .	366
3. Expressionism, New Objectivity, anti-historicism, authoritarianism and alterity . . . . .	380
Expressionism and New Objectivity . . . . .	380
Anti- or trans-historicism . . . . .	384
Authoritarianism and alterity . . . . .	391
 Conclusion: Historiographical debates and responses . . . . .	 399
1. Is Barth best understood through the theological lens alone? . . . . .	399
2. Was Barth in continuity or discontinuity with 19th century modern liberal theology?	401
3. Was Barth apolitical in the Weimar Republic? . . . . .	410
4. Did Barth contribute to the toxic forces that led to the downfall of         the Weimar Republic? . . . . .	417
 Bibliography . . . . .	 431
Barth's Works . . . . .	431
Other Literature . . . . .	440
 Index of Names . . . . .	 471