

Contents

1 Introduction	9
2 What is National Identity?	27
2.1 What is a Nation?	29
2.2 The Construction of National Identity	39
3 Inventing the Canadian Nation	51
3.1 The Tradition of Inventing the Canadian Nation	52
3.2 Inventing the Nation Forged in Fire	79
3.2.1 The Nation Forged in Fire-Myth in Contemporary Memorial Culture	79
3.2.2 The Origin of the Nation Forged in Fire-Myth: The First World War	87
3.2.2.1 The World at War: The First World War as the Great War	87
3.2.2.2 Canada at War: The First World War as Hotbed for Inventing the Canadian Nation	95
4 The Literary Reconstruction of the Canadian Nation Forged in Fire	105
4.1 Concussion and a Translocation of the Nation's Birthplace: Hugh MacLennan's Barometer Rising	107
4.1.1 Introductory Note	107
4.1.2 Barometer Rising	109
4.1.3 Conclusion	119
4.2 The Paradoxical Community of Isolated Individuals: Timothy Findley's The Wars	120
4.2.1 Introductory Note	120
4.2.2 The Wars	122
4.2.3 Conclusion	140

4.3 The Returned Soldiers' Need for Community:
Jack Hodgins' Broken Ground	141
4.3.1 Introductory Note	141
4.3.2 Broken Ground	143
4.3.3 Conclusion	160
4.4 The Canadian National Vimy Memorial and a New Epic Tale of the Birth of the Nation: Jane Urquhart's The Stone Carvers	160
4.4.1 Introductory Note	160
4.4.2 The Stone Carvers	166
4.4.3 Conclusion	185
4.5 The (Dis)Ability Issue: Frances Itani's Deafening	186
4.5.1 Introductory Note	186
4.5.2 Deafening	190
4.5.3 Conclusion	212
4.6 The Native Point of View: Joseph Boyden's Three Day Road	214
4.6.1 Introductory Note	214
4.6.2 Three Day Road	217
4.6.3 Conclusion	236
5 General Conclusion and Outlook	239
Bibliography	245
Primary Works	245
Secondary Works	246