CONTENTS

Introduction: Journalists and Freedom of Expression in the Twentieth Century 1

Clarifying the “Generation of ’32” 6

Defining “Inner Emigration” 9

Three “Inner Emigrants”?: Ernst Jünger, Margret Boveri, and Henri Nannen 11

The Structure of Journalists between Hitler and Adenauer 24

1 Paul Sethe: Resistance and Its Post-Hitler Moral and Journalistic Consequences 26

Family and Academic Training 26

Writing for the Ohligser Anzeiger and the Crisis of the Weimar Republic 30

Sethe’s Politics and Journalism during 1932–1933 31

Maneuvering in the Early Days of the Nazi Regime 37

Serving as Editor at Frankfurter Zeitung 45

On the Fringes of the Anti-Nazi Resistance 53

Flight from Berlin and Early Postwar Search for a New Career 57

Founding the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung 61

Tensions over the FAZ’s Political Orientation and Freedom of Expression 66

Joining Axel Springer’s Die Welt 73

Sethe’s Separation from Springer and Move to Der Stern and Die Zeit 77
2 The Intellectual Journey of Marion Countess Dönhoff 85

Preface 85

Family Life and Career in Times of Peace and War 87

Anti-Nazi Resistance and the July 1944 Plot to Kill Hitler 94

Flight to West Germany, Mourning, and Defending the Anti-Nazi Resistance 97

Pondering Her Lost Heimat and the Idea of a Reunified Germany 110

Marion Dönhoff’s Atlanticism and Its Networks 116

Her “Prussian” Values and Critique of the Evolution of Capitalism 120

3 Hans Zehrer’s Intellectual Journey from Weimar Berlin to Postwar Hamburg: Struggling with Past and Present, 1923–1966 129

The Larger Setting of Weimar Politics 129

Family Background and Early Career 132

Shaping Die Tat into a Major Voice of the Authoritarian Anti-Nazi Right 134

The Establishment of the Hitler Regime 143

Surviving the Hitler Dictatorship on the North Sea Island of Sylt 149

Zehrer’s Search for a Postwar Career and Return to Die Welt 155

The Springer-Zehrer Interventions in International Politics 161

Zehrer’s Slow Demise within the Springer Media Empire 165

Stille vor dem Sturm as the Sum Total of Zehrer’s Weltanschauung 170

4 Hanseatic Journalism and Its Networks 183

Newspapers and Politics in Early Postwar West Germany 183

The Origins of Axel Springer’s Press Empire 186

Gerd Bucerius: Family Background and Postwar Media and Political Ambitions 191

The Acquisition of Der Stern and Die Zeit 195

Bucerius and the Transformation of His Two Liberal Weeklies 200