

Contents

Preface . . . . .	9
Introduction . . . . .	11
Historiographical framework and methodological considerations . . . . .	13
The setting: the Principality of Transylvania in the mid-seventeenth century . . . . .	19
Chapter 1. The confessional element in the 1644–1645 campaign of György Rákóczi I . . . . .	25
1644–1645 and the holy wars: a confessional war without a confessional state? . . . . .	26
Confessional gravamina as political gravamina . . . . .	31
Non-confessional arguments . . . . .	36
Questions of authority: who should represent the homeland? . . . . .	39
Publicum and privatum . . . . .	45
Conclusions: confessional politics? . . . . .	49
Chapter 2. Transylvania on the political map of seventeenth-century Europe . . . . .	53
The drafting and ratification of the treaties of Gyulafehérvár and Munkács . . . . .	54
The allies' reactions to the Peace of Linz . . . . .	65
Transylvania and the Peace of Westphalia . . . . .	75
Chapter 3. The Polish royal election of 1648 . . . . .	87
Rákóczi's supporters in Poland . . . . .	88
Attempts to win the support of foreign powers . . . . .	93
György Rákóczi I's other attempts to secure support . . . . .	97

Chapter 4. Transylvania and Poland, 1649–1652 . . . . .	103
Developments in the Polish-Cossack conflict, 1649–1652 . . . . .	104
The Rákóczi's attempts to interfere in the Polish-Cossack conflict . . . . .	106
The problem of legitimation: the duty to render assistance as a just cause of war . . . . .	113
 Chapter 5. Maintaining the international Protestant network: Zsigmond Rákóczi's marriage to Henriette of the Palatinate . . . . .	119
Choosing the bride . . . . .	120
The marriage contract . . . . .	124
A wedding and a funeral . . . . .	130
 Chapter 6. The Rákóczi and the Kingdom of Hungary, 1648–1652 . . . . .	137
The marginalisation of the confessional question, 1646–1649 . . . . .	137
The dynamics of the relationship between Pál Pálffy and the Rákóczi, 1650–1651 . . . . .	142
The alliance between Pál Pálffy and the Rákóczi, 1651–1652 . . . . .	145
The conflict over the Jesuits . . . . .	151
 Chapter 7. Transylvania and the restructuring of Eastern Europe, 1653– 1655 . . . . .	157
The crisis in Moldavia, 1653 . . . . .	157
Changes in the Polish–Transylvanian–Cossack relationship, 1653–1654. . . . .	162
The idea of preventive war in the campaigns of György Rákóczi II . . . . .	170
 Chapter 8. György Rákóczi II and the Hungarian estates, 1653–1656 . . . . .	179
A new mediator between the prince and the king: György Szelepcsényi. . . . .	179
The prince of Transylvania and the Hungarian diet of 1655 . . . . .	184
György Rákóczi II and the estates of the Kingdom of Hungary in the period before the Polish campaign . . . . .	189
 Chapter 9. The Treaty of Radnót: a Protestant Conspiracy? . . . . .	199
Re-establishing contacts between Sweden and Transylvania, 1655–1656. . . . .	199
The road to Radnót . . . . .	208
 Chapter 10. The confessional element of György Rákóczi II's foreign policy . . . . .	223
Jan Amos Comenius's role in György Rákóczi II's foreign policy . . . . .	224
Historians' accounts of the motivations and rationales for the 1657 invasion of Poland . . . . .	236

---

The justifications for the Polish campaign . . . . .	242
György Rákóczi II's motives for launching his 1657 invasion of Poland . . . . .	247
Conclusions or Does the reason of state chase away all other reasons? . . . . .	251
Bibliography . . . . .	259
Appendix: A glossary of place names from the eastern half of Europe . . . . .	291
Index of names . . . . .	297