

Content

Author's Note	6
Foreword by Amir-Hassan Cheheltan	7
Foreword by Arshin Adib-Moghaddam	10
1. Introduction	13
1.1 Background, leading questions and the study's scope and limitations . . .	13
1.2 Note on methodology	14
2. Understanding the dynamics between civil society, the authoritarian state and geopolitics	15
2.1 Space, civil society and the "great diversity of knowledge"	15
2.2 The triangular relationship during the 2000s: From "democracy promotion" to the de facto promotion of authoritarianism	16
2.3 The triangular relationship under the Rouhani administration	18
3. Cultural Policy in the Islamic Republic of Iran.	22
3.1 Political and cultural framework after the July 2015 nuclear deal: Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose	22
3.2 The Iranian cultural scene: Characteristics, actors and the state's red lines	25
3.3 Challenging the Islamic Republic's dominant Islamist narrative: The cases of the novelists Dowlatabadi and Cheheltan.	29
4. Foreign cultural policy in Iran	33
4.1 German-Iranian cultural projects: Some exemplary cases	34
4.2 The future of cultural relations with Iran: Challenges and risks	35
5. Higher education and academic exchange	38
5.1 Academic relations pre-nuclear deal	39
5.1.1 Tertiary institutions (public or private) and student/staff exchange programmes with Iran	39
5.1.2 Research cooperation	41
5.2 Illustrating the challenges: The case of international relations scholarships in the IRI	45
5.3 Academic relations post-nuclear deal.	46
6. Engaging with various societal groups and other pressing issues	49
7. Conclusion: Prospects and constraints	55
8. Policy recommendations	56
Bibliography	58
About the Author.	64