

CONTENTS

List of contributors	ix
Introduction
László Cseh-Szombathy	1
Chapter 1
A new approach to remarriage - coping strategies after divorce
Pirkko Niemelä, Juhani Myyrä and Ritva Lento (Finland)	9
Introduction	9
Men remarry more often than women	12
Older divorcees remarry less	12
Women with better life conditions do not marry	13
Persons living with children are more often single	14
Former marriage and divorce	15
Are single divorcees more attached to their ex-partners?	17
Who are happier, the single or the remarried?	19
Self-esteem	22
Coping strategies	25
Coping with work and the new sex role	26
Coping with the divorcee's status and friends	29
Coping with sexual self-image and the new partner	33
Coping with children	36
Loneliness and grief	37
The overall coping level	38
Is it risky for men to be alone after divorce?	39
Remarriage as an escape?	40
Women cope better?	42
Women's new single life	44
Remarriage reconsidered	44
Appendix	46
Sampling procedure	46
Description of the interviewed persons	47
Interview	48
The coping rating	49
References	50

Chapter 2

Remarriage

Jan E. Trost (Sweden)	51
Introduction	51
How many divorced persons have remarried?	53
Who remarries?	56
Less homogamy in remarriages?	58
Post-divorce relation with ex-spouse	61
Conclusions	63
Appendix	68
Definition of the population of the survey	68
Sample	68
Data collection	69
Response rate and representativeness	70
References	74

Chapter 3

The adjustment of the divorcees

László Cseh-Szombathy (Hungary)	75
Changing views on divorce	75
Negative consequences of divorce and their elimination. The concept of adjustment	76
Cross-national comparison as a tool to validate propositions on adjustment	77
The investigated problem areas and the applied indicators	78
The Hungarian results	79
Cross-national validation of the Hungarian findings	83
Discussion	91
Conclusions	93
Appendix	95
Definition of the population of the Hungarian survey	95
Sample	95
Data collection	95
Response rate	96
References	97

Chapter 4

Women at divorce

Inger Koch-Nielsen and Lone Gundelach (Denmark)	99
Introduction	99
The background of divorce	101
Comparisons	105
The initiative	107
Comparisons	109
The consequences	109
Children	110
Work and financial situation	111
Housing	115
Conclusion	117

Appendix	119
Population	119
Sampling procedure	119
Data collection and response rate	119
References	121
Chapter 5
The significance of the social network after separation
Iteke Weeda (Netherlands)	123
Introduction	123
The problem	125
Hypotheses	126
Changes in the relation of the ex-spouses	127
Changes in the family relations	131
Changes in the relations with friends and acquaintances
Reactions from the social network	133
Support from the social network	137
Conclusions	142
Appendix	146
Relevant questions put in connection with the significance of the social network	149
Research method of the Dutch project	149
Chapter 6
Changes in the behaviour of children after divorce
Maria Jarosz and Jacek Szymanderski (Poland)	151
Present social evaluation of divorce in Poland	151
Specification of the aim of the study	153
Divorce and the deviant behaviour of children	154
Appendix	169
Organisation and selection of the sample	169
References	170
Chapter 7
Father—child involvement
Constance R. Ahrons and Annemette Sørensen (USA)	171
Introduction	171
Aspects of paternal involvement	174
Characteristics of spouses and their family	180
Family reorganisation after divorce	181
Disagreements at time of divorce and father involvement	183
Feelings about the father—child relationship	184
Former spouse relationship and father involvement	186
Conclusions	188
Appendix	192
Societal context of the American study	192
Sampling	194
Data collection	196
References	197

Chapter 8

Parental co-operation

Kari Moxnes (Norway)	199
Introduction	199
Parental co-operation	201
Laws regulating parental co-operation	202
The extent of parental co-operation. Parental contact	203
Binuclear family meeting	204
The visitation arrangement	204
Satisfaction with parental co-operation	207
Differences in satisfaction between mothers and fathers	208
Differences in satisfaction between residential and visiting parents	209
Factors of importance for parental co-operation	211
Long distances between parental homes	211
Custody arrangements	213
Egalitarian marriages	215
Summary	216
Appendix	218
Population	218
Sampling	218
Methods	219
References	219